It has the M4 chip, the choice between an 8-core or 10-core GPU, and enough battery life for a full workday. It runs smoothly with about 30 to 35 tabs open. This is the MacBook that most WIRED staffers have (I'm writing this on an older one right now!), so if yours is about to die, you should get this.The Mac Mini is a computer designed to sit stationary on your desk, but now that it's smaller than ever, so much so that you could toss it in a bag for hybrid work setups. The new Mac Mini sports incremental updates over its predecessor. This is still a great little computer, and you can build an affordable, stationary setup around it. This has plenty of power for most users, but is not going to compete with a gaming PC.The Best iPad DealEveryone wants an iPad this year, mainly because of iPadOS 26 updates like window tiling that make it function much more like a computer. Now you can take a light tablet on vacation, watch movies, and get some work done! This is the best basic iPad, even if there's not enough RAM to support Apple Intelligence (you may consider this a perk).The Best HeadphonesThe AirPods Pro 3 just came out, but they're already discounted for the holiday season. I'm expecting a lot of people to pick these up there are more earbuds, so they fit better than ever and are finally good workout headphones. In December, Apple will also drop more language translation options, adding support for Italian, Japanese, Korean, and simplified Chinese.Apples $129 $69 (47% off) AmazonThe fourth generation AirPods are not favorites of our reviewers because of their rigid shape and mediocre sound, but they sure are convenient to toss in your bag and at this price you don't have to feel too bad about misplacing them.The Solo 4s stark minimalism show Apples hand in the Beats brand, pointing instead to their slimline design, upgraded sound, and versatile core features. Highlights to this version include up to 50 hours of playback per charge, the ability to plug in with either 3.5-mm or USB-C for lossless audio and in-house features for both Android and Apple phones.Photograph: AmazonThe Best AccessoriesPower up with unlimited access to WIRED. Nina Raemont/ZDNETFollow ZDNET: Add us as a preferred source on Google. Apple released three new smartwatches in September, and while they may look similar, their differences are stark. I've tested all three to get a sense of which watches work best for different people. Cyber Week discounts cut the price of each smartwatch down substantially, so it's a great time to shop. If you're gift-shopping for the Apple obsessive in your life ahead of the busy holiday season, you may be disoriented by the available options. Which, out of the three Apple Watches, should you buy? Also: The five tech splurges that are 100% worth it (and on sale, thankfully)!I've even included one Apple Watch model from 2024 that, thanks to some retroactive updates through WatchOS 26, is a worthy contender for purchase this year. Here's the breakdown.1. Who should buy the Apple Watch SE 3? Nina Raemont/ZDNETThe Apple Watch SE 3 is an entry-level smartwatch built for beginners. They may be unsure whether they'll really use a smartwatch day in and day out and don't want to splurge on a pricier model just yet.The device still packs many upgrades and, despite its affordable price, comes with many of the upgrades that the other watches in the lineup include. In many ways, the SE 3 takes the specs of last year's Series 10 and implements them in this affordable smartwatch — an 18-hour battery life, Sleep Apnea Detection, and its latest chip, the S10.Also: I compared every Apple Watch in 2025 — here's why I recommend this model the mostThe screen is the smallest out of the lineup, and communicating through text can be annoying with only a letter-drawing feature or speak-to-text available.Best features18-hour battery lifeSleep Apnea DetectionSleep ScoresApples latest S10 chipWhat Apple Watch SE 3 doesn't haveHypertension Detection, blood oxygen monitoring, ECG The Series 11's 24-hour battery lifeThe brightest display (only 1,000 nits)Who is the Apple Watch SE 3 best for?First-time smartwatch users, kids and teens, budget-conscious shoppers, people who want to monitor sleep and activity (but not monitor more advanced metrics like hypertension, blood oxygen, or by-the-minute heart rate data). 2. Who should buy the Apple Watch Series 11? Nina Raemont/ZDNETApples flagship smartwatch has the second-longest battery life out of the lineup (and it's $400 less than the Ultra 3 with the longest battery life). I see the Series 11 as the Apple Watch that power users with older models would upgrade to. As someone with a smaller wrist, the Series 11 and SE 3 are perfect sizes for my wrist, while the Ultra 3 took up too much surface area and weighed my arm down. For this reason, I'd recommend the Series 11 over the Ultra 3 to women.Also: I tested the Apple Watch Series 11 for a week — here's my buying advice nowCompared to its Series 10 predecessor, there isn't much of a difference, besides the 24-hour battery life and durable display. But software-wise, everything is practically the same.Best features24-hour battery lifeHypertension Detection More durable displaySleep ScoresWhat Apple Watch Series 11 doesn't haveThe Ultra 3's Emergency SOS via SatelliteThe Ultra 3's 3,000 nits displayWho is the Apple Watch Series 11 best for?Owners of Apple Watch Series 8 or earlier seeking an upgrade, people who want to regularly track all aspects of their health, people who will wear the watch nonstop -- both during the day and to track their sleep at night. 3. Who should buy the Apple Watch Ultra 3 Nina Raemont/ZDNETApples most expensive and feature-rich smartwatch has the largest screen, the longest battery life, every health feature, great durability, and off-grid functionalities, like Emergency SOS via satellite for outdoor enthusiasts.Best features42-hour battery lifeSatellite connectivityHypertension DetectionLargest screenSleep ScoresWhat the Apple Watch Ultra 3 doesn't haveA thin build (sleeping with the device is a pain)An affordable price (Without a discount, it's $799. With a discount it's $700)Who is the Apple Watch Ultra 3 best for?Outdoor enthusiasts and off-grid hikers, people who want a large watch display, people who can afford a $700 watch, and people who want all of Apple Watch's best, newest, and advanced features. 4. Who should buy the Apple Watch Series 10? Nina Raemont/ZDNETYou might be scratching your head reading this. Wasn't the Series 10 unveiled last year? Yes. But I'd argue it's a worthy buy this year for deal-grabbing Apple Watch customers. Thanks to some of the retroactive upgrades coming to earlier smartwatch models, including the Series 9, Series 10, and Ultra 2, you can get much of the same software on a cheaper Apple Watch.Also: Should you upgrade to Apple Watch Series 11? Here's how it compares to older modelsYou won't get the Series 11's 24-hour battery life, but if you don't mind charging your watch ahead of bedtime sleep-tracking, this probably won't be an issue.Best featuresHypertension DetectionSleep ScoresWatchOS 26 (available on the new watches)Same build and thinness as Series 11What Apple Watch Series 10 doesn't haveWatch Series 11's 24-hour battery lifeA more durable displayWho is the Apple Watch Series 10 best for?Smartwatch shoppers on a budget, people who don't care about the latest lineup, people who will wear their watch during the day and occasionally sleep track, people who are on top of charging their device if they want continual use (because the watch only lasts 18 hours).
