In this rebus puzzle the word LEVEL is split and written in two lines. From this given hint, can you find out the correct word, phrase or saying? ANSWER Bi level is the correct answer ExplanationThe meaning of the term Bi level is that having two levels of passengers or having two levels of space. So like the meaning of this term, in the hint image the word Level, is also splitted and written in two levels. Thus the correct answer can be interpreted as Bi level. Another solution for this puzzle is SPLIT LEVEL. But we think Bi level is a bit more matching solution to the hint image. Comment if you have got any other correct answers for this riddle. For example, the word "beer" might be depicted by a rebus showing an illustrated humbeelze next to a plus sign (+) and the letter "n". It was a favourite form of heraldic expression used in the Middle Ages to denote surnames. For example, in its basic form, three salmon (fish) are used to denote the surname "Salmon". A more sophisticated example was the rebus of Bishop Walter Lyhart (d. 1472) of Norwich, consisting of a stag (or hart) lying down in a conventional representation of water. The composition alludes to the name, profession or personal characteristics of the bearer, and speaks to the beholder NOn verbiis, sed Rebus, which Latin expression signifies "not by words but by things"[1] (res, rei (f), a thing, object, matter; rebus being ablative plural).[2]Further information: Canting armsRebuses are used extensively as a form of heraldic expression as a hint to the name of the bearer; they are not synonymous with canting arms. A man might have a rebus as a personal identification device entirely separate from his armorials, canting or otherwise. For example, Sir Richard Weston (d. 1541) bore as arms: Ermine, on a chief azure five bezants, whilst his rebus, displayed many times in terracotta plaques on the walls of his mansion Sutton Place, Surrey, was a "tun" or barrel, used to designate the last syllable of his surname.An example of canting arms proper are those of the Borough of Congleton in Cheshire consisting of a conger eel, a lion (in Latin, leo) and a tun (barrel). This word sequence "conger-leo-tun" enunciates the town's name. Similarly, the coat of arms of St. Ignatius Loyola contains wolves (in Spanish, lobo) and a kettle (olla), said by some (probably incorrectly) to be a rebus for "Loyola". The arms of Elizabeth Bowes-Lyon feature hons and lions.A rebus puzzle representing top secreta modern example of the rebus used as a form of word play is:H + = Hear, or Here By extension, it also uses the positioning of words or parts words in relation to each other to convey a hidden meaning, for example:p walk ark: walk in the park.A rebus made up solely of letters (such as "CU" for "See you") is known as a gramogram, grammagram, or letteral word. This concept is sometimes extended to include numbers (as in "08" for "Kuwait", or "8" for "ate").[3] Rebuses are sometimes used in crossword puzzles, with multiple letters or a symbol fitting into a single square.[4]The term rebus also refers to the use of a pictogram to represent a syllabic sound. This adapts pictograms into phonograms. A precursor to the development of the alphabet, this process represents one of the most important developments of writing. Fully developed hieroglyphs read in rebus fashion were in use at Abydos in Egypt as early as 3400 BCE.[5] In Mesopotamia, the principle was first employed on Proto-Cuneiform tablets, beginning in the Jemdet Nasr period (c. 31002900 BC).[6][7]The writing of correspondence in rebus form became popular in the eighteenth century and continued into the nineteenth century. Lewis Carroll wrote the children he befriended picture-puzzle rebus letters, nonsense letters, and looking-glass letters, which had to be held in front of a mirror to be read.[8] Rebus letters served either as a sort of code or simply as a pastime.Ramesses II as child: Hieroglyphs: Ra-mes-nul linguistics, the rebus principle is the use of existing symbols, such as pictograms, purely for their sounds regardless of their meaning, to represent new words. Many ancient writing systems used what we now term "the rebus principle" to represent abstract words, which otherwise would be hard to represent with pictograms. An example that illustrates the Rebus principle is the representation of the sentence "I can see you" by using the pictographs of "eyecanseawee".Some linguists believe that the Chinese developed their writing system according to the rebus principle.[9] and Egyptian hieroglyphs sometimes used a similar system. A famous rebus statue of Ramses II uses three hieroglyphs to compose his name: Horus (su, for Ra; the child, mes; and the sedge plant (stalk held in left hand), su; the name Ra-mes-su is then formed.[10]Canada1980s children's game show Kidstreet featured a rebus during "supper tomorrow at Sanssouci?"; reply: G grand, A petit! It bore a scroll in its beak bearing the letters D.O.M., forming a rebus based on his surname, which would probably have been pronounced at the time as owl-on.[14]The nineteenth-century French sculptor Jean-Pierre Dantan would place rebuses on the socles of his caricature busts to identify the subject. For example, Victor Hugo was an axe (hache in French, which sounds like the French pronunciation of "H") + UG + crossed bones (os, sounding like "O"). Hector Berlioz was represented by the letters BER low on the socle, with a bed (lit, for "li") comparatively high on the socle to mean "haut", the French for high, pronounced with a silent "h" and "r" and the digraph "au" sounding like "O").[15]Rebus Bibles such as A Curious Hieroglyphic Bible were popular in the late eighteenth century for teaching children to read the Bible.[16]Franciscans interacting with Nahuatl-speaking groups found that the Cholultecans used rebus principles to record information in Latin. The Cholultecans learned the Pater Noster or Lord's Prayer with the aid of drawing pictures of a pantl (flag or banner) to represent pater and a picture of a prickly pear, noctlii, for noster. This practice was seen as a strength of the people's pictographic literacy.[17]See also: Japanese rebus monogramA bottle of Yamato Shizuku (, Japan droplet) sake (name spelt out at top right), with a rebus which is read as yama (, mountain) (symbolized by the ) + (, katakana character for to) + shizuku (, droplet) (symbolized by the In the Jpan, the rebus known as hanjimon (J18) was immensely popular during the Edo period.[19] A piece by ukiyo-e artist Kunisada was "Actor Puzzles" (Yakusha hanjimon) that featured rebuses.[20]Today the most often seen of these symbols is a picture of a sickle, a circle, and the letter nu (, read as kama-wa-nu (, sickle circle nu), interpreted as kamawanu (, the old-fashioned form of kamawanai (, don't worry, doesn't matter)).
